Alabama man charged with threatening DA Fani Willis over Trump prosecution

By Darryl Coote

A federal grand jury in Atlanta has indicted a 59-year-old man on allegations that he sent Fulton County District Attorney Fani Willis threatening messages over her prosecution of former President Donald Trump.

Arthur Ray Hanson of Huntsville, Ala., was indicted Wednesday on charges of transmitting a press release Monday.

The indictment states Hanson called the Fulton County customer services line twice on Aug. 6 and left voice mails threatening violence against Willis and Fulton County Sheriff Patrick Labat.

"Watch it when you're going to the car at night, when you're going into your house, watch everywhere that your going," he told Willis in the message, according to an excerpt of the recording quoted by the Justice Department in its release.

"I would be very afraid if I were you because interstate threats, the Justice Department said in you can't be around people all the time that are going to protect you."

5 strategic blunders have hampered U.S. foreign relations

By Harlan Ullman

With wars raging in Ukraine and Israel, escalation and disaster loom, probably more so than at any time during

The Biden administration, so far, has been competent and sensible in responding to the war in the Middle East. However, Hezbollah and Iran continue to provoke Israel, attack U.S. forces in Syria and Iraq and could intervene on the side of Hamas.

In these circumstances, any decision the administration takes is laden with danger. Hence, examining the worst strategic blunders the United States has made over the past two decades could well inform the White House on how to avoid future disaster.

Five of the worst blunders have been arbitrarily chosen although readers, may have other nominees.

President George W. Bush was responsible for Numbers 1 and 3 blunders; President Barack Obama for Number 2; and President Donald Trump for 4 and 5. Given the many blunders America has made since the new century dawned, competition for selection was keen.

The attacks of Sept. 11 stunned and infuriated the country. Bush had no option except to respond decisively. U.S. forces were initially deployed into Afghanistan to neutralize al-Qaida and kill or capture Osama bin Laden.

The administration then embarked on the "Freedom" Agenda," using the specter of weapons of mass destruction as the rationale for invading Iraq. The assumption was that by imposing democracy in Iraq, "the geostrategic framework of the Middle East would be forever altered." It did change, but for the worst.

Nation building was a disaster in Afghanistan. Democracy was impossible to impose on a tribal society. Similarly, the 2003 Iraq invasion provoked an insurgency that still lingers. Consequently, the combination of the decisions made after 9/11 that led to the interventions in Afghanistan and Iraq was the worst foreign policy blunder of this century and possibly much of the past one by bringing seemingly permanent turmoil to the Middle East with no respite in sight.

Number 3, made by Bush, was abrogating the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty of 1972. Bush entered office determined to improve missile defense. The ABM Treaty was a limitation. With its abrogation, U.S. and Russian relations were dealt what turned out to be the first fatal blow beginning an irreversible, steady disintegration. And Sept. 11 intervened.

Obama was chastised for declaring "red lines" on Syrian President Bashar al-Assad that were not enforced. However, the second-biggest U.S. foreign policy blunder was ordering a "strategic pivot" to Asia. Allies in Europe and NATO were surprised and shocked. In the Pacific, allies were terrified about the "pivot" making China an enemy. And that is what happened, guaranteed by Obama's National Security Strategy.

The military component of the strategy could not have been clearer. The aims were to deter and, if war came, defeat China, along with four other potential adversaries. How could China not assume it had become an American enemy, laying the predicate for the hostility that now defines the U.S.-China relationship?

Trump committed strategic blunders 4 and 5. Number 4 was cancellation of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action with Iran. If honored by both sides, Iran would never -- repeat never -- obtain a nuclear weapon. Some might argue that this blunder could have been Number 2 or 3.

Iran could cheat. That was unlikely because of the intimate presence of the International Atomic Energy Agency inspectors and the installed surveillance system. But if Iran cheated, the treaty was useless. Withdrawal from the JCPOA has left no restraint on Iran producing nuclear weapons.

Number 5 was the imposition of tariffs on the imports of Chinese goods. A huge imbalance in the current account of goods and services favored China. Trump saw the trade imbalance as intolerable.

They Chanted 'by Any Means Necessary' Is This What They Wanted?

Hamas launched a surprise attack on Israel, ruthlessly killing over 1,000 Israelis in the name of their god and in furtherance of their desire for Israel's land. These savages -- as they may aptly be called -- in concert with Iran and their disjointed Palestinian allies, have a single-minded goal: to obliterate Israel and its people. The good news for Israel is that this might be the extent of the attackers' capabilities. However, they were caught off guard despite Israel's overwhelming might and strength. The pressing question on everyone's mind is how this could happen, given Israel's extensive spy network and technology that taps into conversations from every

How did they miss this? The ongoing regional conflict, tracing its roots at least as far back as the early 1900s, witnessed another episode when Hamas launched an attack on Israel. We must acknowledge that this isn't necessarily a U.S. or Israeli intelligence failure. The nature of the attacks Israel experienced suggests that a group's work is more akin to a militia rather than a truly centralized, coordinated effort.

corner of the Middle East.

Militias present a unique challenge. Ironically, their lack of centralized coordination often renders their actions more unpredictable and thus harder to anticipate. This dynamic can be seen in places like Afghanistan, which has been colloquially termed "the graveyard of empires." The region's heavy reliance on militias to confront adversaries creates a treacherous environment for invading forces. The unpredictable nature of militias, with their varying degrees of sophistication, numerous units, and dispersed operations, leaves armies essentially navigating in the dark, relying solely on the immediate intelligence gathered by their frontline troops.

The attacks on 9/11 serve as a reminder that even the defense mechanisms. The events of that day were orchestrated by mere men armed with knives, and the fallout was arguably the most significant tragedy in American history. The U.S., in many ways like Israel, has thwarted countless plots -- many more than the general public would likely want to be aware of. However, it only takes one overlooked detail, one lapse in intelligence, to lead to immense reper-

In the current scenario, we see individuals soaring into Israel on motorized gliders, brandishing AK-47s. This is not a conventional army; it's not a group that can be sat down for negotiations. It's a stark contrast to the times of Henry Kissinger, where diplomatic shuttling could lead to treaties and conflict resolutions. In this situation, there's no room for such traditional diplomacy. The most viable course of action appears to be defense and retaliation, with the hope that lessons are learned. This way, if caught off guard again, the response can be more swift and effective.

The behavior exhibited by certain pro-Palestinian activists celebrating this brutality is nothing short of appalling. These aren't advocates for peace or any noble cause; they seem to have lost all touch with humanity. Their behavior is akin to savages, taking pleasure in violence and parading their heinous actions as if collecting trophies. When groups like the New York City Democratic Socialists of America rally in support of these actions in places such as Times Square and outside the Israeli consulate, like they recently did, it's a chilling reminder of the depths of depravity some are willing to sink to. The terrifying reality is that there are backers for this kind of barbarity right on our doorstep.

I recently encountered a thought-provoking sentiment that offers a unique perspective on this conflict situation. It asks: "If both sides had the power to do whatever they wanted, what would they do?" Undeniably, Israel has a formidable military. If they so choose, they have the means to exert overwhelming force. In a day, Palestine could be wiped from the face of the Earth. Yet, they show restraint. This restraint is not merely out of fear of international condemnation but rooted in their national and humanistic values. These savages are different. If the roles were reversed, they would undoubtedly kill every Jew and Israeli; seeing dead Israeli bodies paraded around Palestine proves this point. Advocates of this indiscriminate slaughter do so on the grounds that they consider it to be morally justifiable. The moral rationale behind engaging in ransacking followed by rape, murder, and subsequently parading their bodies is beyond my comprehension. Nevertheless, even assuming it was somehow justifiable, we must remember that this is wholly based on a lie. These fringe organizations frequently express their support despite the fact that the media, which is remarkably more pro-Israeli today, regularly disseminates false information about this regional conflict. The notion that Israel intentionally targets Palestinian children and adults for slaughter is an absurdity that defies the facts.

Each time armaments and missiles are directed toward Israel, Israel retaliates by immobilizing these weapons. But, these terrorists house these weapons in schools and residential buildings. Does Israel bear responsibility for Hamas deliberately storing those weapons in schools with the intention of using the bodies of children as a defense mechanism? Must Israel simply allow their own children to be bombarded by rockets continually? These behaviors are consistent with criminal savages, not saints, and they do not deserve adoration. However, they are given it, and in this world, we will perpetually contend with savages and those who support them. Savages are doomed to exist. They are unreceptive to rationality.

I firmly believe that the overwhelming majority of Palestinians, like people everywhere, are good-hearted individuals seeking peaceful lives free from the constant shadow of conflict. The world needs more voices championing love over territory and unity over division. We should be promoting understanding and coexistence instead of allowing narrow political agendas to dictate our future. We must rise above the strife, come together, and shape a future filled with hope and prosperity for all.

Extreme weather is outpacing worst-case scenarios of forecasting

By Ravindra Jayaratne University of East London

In the wake of the destructive Hurricane Otis, we find ourselves at a pivotal moment in the history of weather forecasting. The hurricane roared ashore with 165-mph winds and torrential rainfall, slamming into the coastal city of Acapulco, Mexico and claiming the lives of at least 48 people.

The speed at which Otis intensified was unprecedented. Within 12 hours, it went from a regular tropical storm to a "category 5" hurricane, the most powerful category and one which might occur only a few times worldwide each year.

This rare and alarming event, described by the U.S. National Hurricane Center as a "nightmare scenario," broke records for the fastest intensification rate over a 12-hour period in the eastern Pacific. Otis not only caught residents and authorities off-guard but also exposed the limitations of our current predictive tools.

I specialize in the study of natural disasters with the goal of improving our ability to predict them and ultimately to save lives. It is critical that we address the pressing concerns related to the tools we use for forecasting these catastrophic events, all while recognizing the significant influence of rapid climate change on our forecasting capabilities.

Predictive tools

At the core of weather forecasting are computer programs, or "models," that blend atmospheric variables such as temperature, humidity, wind and pressure, with fundamental physics.

Since the atmospheric processes are nonlinear, a small degree of uncertainty in initial atmospheric conditions can lead to a large discrepancy in final forecasts. That's why the general practice now is to forecast a set of possible scenarios rather than predict the single scenario most likely to occur.

But while these models are instrumental in issuing early warnings and evacuation orders, they have fundamental limitations and carry a significant degree of uncertainty, especially when dealing with rare or extreme weather. This uncertainty arises from various factors including the fundamentally chaotic nature of the system. First, the historical data is incomplete, since a hurricane such as Otis might occur only once in several millennia. We don't know when an east Pacific storm last turned into a category 5 hurricane overnight -- if ever -- but it was certainly before modern satellites and weather buoys. Our models struggle to account for these "1 in 1,000-year events" because we simply haven't observed them before.

The complex physics governing the weather also has to be simplified in these predictive models. While this approach is effective for common scenarios, it falls short when dealing with the intricacies of extreme events that involve rare combinations of variables unknown unknowns: factors our models cannot account for because we are unaware of them, or they have not been integrated into our predictive frameworks. Unanticipated interactions among various climatic drivers can lead to unprecedented intensification, as was the case with Hurricane Otis.

And then there are the

Climate change

To all this we can add the problem of climate change and its impact on extreme weather. Hurricanes, in particular, are influenced by rising sea surface temperatures, which provides more energy for storms to form and intensify.

The connection between climate change and the intensification of hurricanes, coupled with other factors such as high precipitation or high tides, is becoming clearer.

With established weather patterns being altered, it is becoming even more challenging to predict the behavior of storms and their intensification. Historical data may no longer serve as a reliable guide.

Prosecutors said that he told Willis that her safety was in jeopardy if she went ahead with filing a fourth indictment against Trump, which she would do about a week after receiving the call.

"When you charge Trump on that fourth indictment, anytime you're alone, be looking over your shoulder," he is accused of having said in the voicemail.

He is also accused of leaving a threatening message for Labat on the same day. According to the Justice Department prosecutors, Hanson told Labat that "bad [expletives] gonna happen to you" if he takes Trump's mugshot. The infamous mugshot was taken Aug. 24 when the former president presented himself to be booked into the Georgia jail.

Hanson is to be formally arraigned in Atlanta on Nov. 13.

"Sending interstate threats to physically harm prosecutors and law enforcement officers is a vile act intended to interfere with the administration of justice and intimidate individuals who accept a solemn duty to protect and safeguard the rights of citizens," U.S. Attorney Ryan Buchanan said.

Trump and 18 other co-defendants were indicted by a Fulton County grand jury Aug. 14 on racketeering charges in connection to their alleged scheme to overturn the state's 2020 presidential election.

Several of the defendants have since pleaded guilty.

Former NFL player Sergio Brown remains jailed while awaiting trial in mom's slaying

By Mark Moran

Former NFL player Sergio Brown will remain behind bars without bail until his trial on charges that he killed his mother and hid her body, Circuit Court Judge Teresa

The 35-year-old Sergio Brown was arrested October 0 in San Diego while re-entering the United States from Mexico and was then extradited to the Chicago suburb of Maywood, where he was charged with first-degree murder and concealing the body of his mother, Myrtle Brown, the Cook County State's Attorney said.

Gonzalez said there were several factors that led to her decision to remand Brown without bail, saying the former NFL player poses a "real and present threat to the Brown was in restraints and wearing red shorts and

FIFA bans Spain's Luis Rubiales for 3 years for Jenni Hermoso World Cup kiss

By Alex Butler

FIFA issued a 3-year ban from all soccer-related activities to former Spanish Football Association president Luis Rubiales for his kiss of Jenni Hermoso at the 2023 World Cup, the sport's governing body announced Monday.

FIFA's disciplinary committee said Rubiales acted in breach of article 13 of its disciplinary code, offensive behavior and violations of the principles of fair play. Rubiales can appeal the

"Mr. Rubiales has been notified of the terms of the FIFA disciplinary committee's decision today," FIFA said in a news release.

"In accordance with the relevant provisions of the FIFA disciplinary code, he has 10 days in which to request a motivated decision, which, if requested, would subsequently be published on legal.fifa.com."

Rubiales kissed Hermoso, who maintains the action was not consensual, on the stage during the trophy presentation for Spain's 1-0 win over England in the World Cup final Aug. 20 in Sydney. He was caught on camera as he pulled her head forward with both hands and kissed her on the lips.

FIFA opened disciplinary proceedings against Rubiales days later and went on to issue an initial three-month suspension Aug. 26. Rubiales, who maintains his innocence, refused to resign and accused Hermoso of lying, stepped down Sept. 10.

Five days later, a judge in Spain approved a restraining order that bars Rubiales from being within 600 feet of Hermoso and from contacting her during an investigation linked to a sexual assault complaint a prosecutor filed against the former Spanish soccer boss.

Hermoso, her teammates and Spanish Football Association officials have testified as part of that investigation.

"FIFA reiterates its absolute commitment to respecting and protecting the integrity of all people and ensuring that the basic rules of decent conduct are upheld," FIFA said.

Argentina coach deems Lionel Messi 'healthy' after two-goal performance

By Alex Butler

Argentina manager Lionel Scaloni declared Lionel Messi healthy again after the soccer sensation scored twice and played every minute in a win over Peru in a World Cup qualifier.

Messi scored in the 32nd and 42nd minutes of the 2-0 victory Tuesday in Lima.

"The most important thing is that he is healthy," Scaloni told reporters. "That is the best thing. He is managing his minutes alone."

New research helps date ancient art in Puerto Rico's karstic caves

By Casey Feindt UPI

A new study to be presented Wednesday at a Geological Society of America meeting suggests that some of the earliest drawings in Puerto Rican caves are thousands of years old.

The drawings in the karstic caves could indicate the presence of the first slave art, researchers

The Geological Society said previous attempts to date the cave art were based on comparisons with nearby archaeological artifacts and may not have accurately the art's creation.

Angel Acosta-Colon, a geo-

Reniel Rodríguez, an archaeologist at UPR Utuado, traveled to almost a dozen caves on La Isla Grande, the largest island in the Puerto Rican archipelago, to collect sample pigments of the pictographic art.

The samples then underwent carbon-14 dating at the Center for Applied Isotope Studies at the University of Georgia. There, the earliest abstract pictographs in the caves dated to about 700 to 400 BCE.

"That is very important to represented the true timeframe of us because when the European invasion came to Puerto Rico, they put in a document that
